

Ever been stuck in meeting that just seemed to go on and on for hours, even though it was only scheduled to last an hour? Ever thought about physically harming one of your colleagues who droned on and on about visions, missions, KPAs, KRAs and CSFs? Ever thought that PowerPoint was the work of the devil?

Well, you are certainly not alone! So, I present to you my version of a little game to amuse yourself in meetings. By playing a simple game of Bullshit Bingo in meetings you can appear to be paying attention, pretend to be taking notes and of course, feign interest and enthusiasm under the guise of cynical giggles!

The rules are simple:

- Print out a couple of copies of Bullshit Bingo for you and your conniving cohorts
- Every time one of your colleagues utters one of the priceless bits of bullshit in the boxes below, mark it off
- The winner (and aren't we all winners in this game?) is the first to mark off a complete row or column and shouts out, very loudly, "Bullshit Bingo!"

Let's get our ducks in a row	Ballpark	Out of/in the loop	Let's take this offline	Empowerment
Close of play	The bottom line is...	Synergies	Thinking outside of the box	Adding value
It's not rocket science	Level the playing field	Bullshit Bingo FREE SQUARE	Blue sky thinking	Low-hanging fruit
Solution (get up and leave if used as a verb)	Diversity	The only constant is change	We need to leverage our core competencies	Win win
Crunch the numbers	Touch base	No brainer	Transformation	At the end of the day
